In 1600 C.E. East India Company was established in England. Queen Elizabeth granted the charter to the East India Company to trade in areas East of Africa. This included Sub-continent, Indonesia, Malaysia etc. In the start, the East India Company tried their luck in the islands of Indonesia but they were unable to extract desirable profits from there. To make trading more difficult they had a formidable opposition in the form of the Dutch. Dutch and Portuguese already claimed the Islands of Indonesia. In 1623 an incident permanently convinced the British to turn toward India. Twenty-one men were killed by Dutch in Amboyna out of which ten were the servants of the British East India Company, the incident is known as the Amboyna Massacre.

Portuguese opened the sea route to India. They were first people who started to trade with India from Europe. The next European people to follow them were Dutch. England was the third European country to trade with India. Portuguese and Dutch restricted themselves to small areas within India. On the other hand British tried their luck all over India and it paid off. Within 150 years of their stay in India British were in such a strong position that they started to challenge the local rulers and even the Mughal

1 In 1623 the Dutch governor, Herman Van, stationed there was suspicious about the presence and activities of the British. He believed that British are conspiring with Japanese to kill him.
