

Psychologists generally prefer the experimental method to other research methods because

Psychologists generally prefer the experimental method to other research methods because

- A. experiments are more likely to support psychologists' hypotheses.
 - B. experiments can show cause-effect relationships.
 - C. it is easier to obtain a random sample for an experiment.
 - D. double-blind designs are unnecessary in an experiment.
-