Correct Answer: A (Don’t be greedy or ungrateful towards those who provide for you.)

Explanation:

The proverb “Don’t bite the hand that feeds you” means that you should not harm, criticize or be ungrateful to someone who has helped or provided for you. The hand refers to the person or organization that is supporting you, while biting the hand symbolizes harming or acting against them.

Option B, “Don’t trust anyone who gives you food,” is incorrect because it does not relate to the proverb’s intended meaning. Option C, “Don’t eat food that has already been bitten,” is also incorrect because it is a literal interpretation of the proverb that has no connection to its intended meaning. Option D, “Don’t work with people who have different eating habits than you,” is also unrelated to the proverb’s intended meaning.

In summary, the proverb “Don’t bite the hand that feeds you” means that you should not harm, criticize or be ungrateful to someone who has helped or provided for you. It is important to recognize and appreciate those who support and assist us, rather than take them for granted or act against them.
