

What is the function of the word “are” in the following sentence: “The men are there to help you?”

“The men are there to help you?”

What is the function of the word “are” in the following sentence:

- A. Gerund
- B. Helping verb
- C. Infinitive
- D. Transitive

Show Answer

Correct Answer: B (Helping verb)

Explanation

In the sentence “The man are there to help you”, the word “are” is a helping verb used to indicate the present tense of the verb “to be”. In this case, “are” is used with the subject “man” to form the present tense of the verb “to be”. The correct sentence should be “The men are there to help you.”

Understanding Verbs

Verbs are words that describe an action or a state of being. Helping verbs are verbs that help to form verb tenses or add emphasis to a sentence. In the sentence “The man are there to help you”, “are” is a helping verb used with the subject “man” to indicate that the sentence is in the present tense.

A Table list of other helping verbs

What is the function of the word “are” in the following sentence: “The men are there to help you?”

Helping Verbs

Here is a list of some other helping verbs:

First

- am
- is
- are
- was
- were
- has
- have
- had

Second

- do
- does
- did
- can
- could
- may
- might
- must

Third

- shall
- should
- will
- would

What is the function of the word “are” in the following sentence: “The men are there to help you?”

Helping verbs are used in combination with a main verb to add meaning to a sentence, such as indicating tense, mood, or possibility. They are called helping verbs because they “help” the main verb to form a complete thought or express a complete idea.

Helping verbs are used in combination with a main verb to add meaning to a sentence, such as indicating tense, mood, or possibility. They are called helping verbs because they “help” the main verb to form a complete thought or express a complete idea.