Show Answer...

Correct Answer: A. A traditional assembly of tribal leaders

Loya Jirga:

“Loya Jirga” is a term used in Pashto culture and in Afghanistan specifically, to refer to a traditional assembly of tribal leaders, community representatives, and elders, who come together to make important decisions for their communities. These decisions can be on issues of war and peace, resolving disputes, tribal relations, and many other issues which are important to the society and the nation. This type of assembly is held in times of crisis, or when important matters need to be discussed. It is a traditional and time-honored institution that has been used in Pashtun society for centuries, and it’s considered as a way of resolving disputes and making decisions in a consultative and democratic way. It is a way of bringing the voices of community members together and arriving at a decision that is considered to be the best for the community as a whole.
