What is the patriarchal society?

A. A society in which men hold more power and status than women
B. A society in which women hold more power and status than men
C. A society where men and women hold equal power and status
D. A society in which men and women are not present

Show Answer…
Correct Answer: A. A society in which men hold more power and status than women

Patriarchal society?

A patriarchal society is a society in which men hold more power and status than women, and where social and political systems are structured to benefit men. This type of society is characterized by a male-dominated hierarchy, where men hold the most influential positions in government, politics, business, and other areas of social and economic power. In patriarchal societies, men are often considered to be the head of the household and are responsible for making the major decisions. The culture, customs, laws, and values of a patriarchal society often prioritize the needs, perspectives, and well-being of men above women. The idea of male privilege is deeply embedded in a patriarchal society, in which men's voices, interests, and needs are privileged and given priority over those of women, and this can be seen in various aspects of social and economic life such as in the workplace, in education and even in politics.