Show Answer...

Correct Answer: C (Australia)

Explanation:

The Gibson Desert is a large desert region located in the central part of Australia, covering an area of approximately 156,000 square kilometers (60,000 square miles). It is located in Western Australia, stretching from the Great Sandy Desert in the north to the Great Victoria Desert in the south.

The Gibson Desert is named after Alfred Gibson, a surveyor who was one of the first Europeans to explore the region in the early 1900s. The desert is known for its red sand dunes, sparse vegetation, and unique wildlife, including the bilby, which is a small marsupial.

The Gibson Desert is also home to several indigenous groups, including the Pintupi, Warlpiri, and Martu people, who have lived in the region for thousands of years. They have a rich cultural heritage and maintain a deep connection to the land and its natural resources.

Despite its remote location and harsh environment, the Gibson Desert has become a popular destination for adventure travelers and explorers. Visitors can take guided tours of the region, go on camel treks, or even embark on a multi-day hiking expedition through the desert. However, it is important to take the necessary precautions and be well-prepared for the extreme conditions of the desert.
